by Upton Sinclair • 1906

FONT SIZE A A A A

Upton Sinclair (1878-1968) was a famous twentieth century poet who often experimented with different genres. The Jungle, published in 1906, exposed the harsh conditions of the meatpacking industry in Chicago and other similar industrial cities. Public pressure during the aftermath of the book's publication led to the passage of the Meat Inspection Act, which helps ensure that meat is packaged under sanitary conditions. As you read the text, take notes on Sinclair's use of imagery and tone in describing the conditions of the meatpacking industry.

- [1] With one member trimming beef in a cannery, and another working in a sausage factory, the family had a first-hand knowledge of the great majority of Packingtown swindles. For it was the custom, as they found, whenever meat was so spoiled that it could not be used for anything else, either to can it or else to chop it up into sausage. With what had been told them by Jonas, who had worked in the pickle rooms, they could now study the whole of the spoiled-meat industry on the inside, and read a new and grim meaning into that old Packingtown jest—that they use everything of the pig except the squeal.

Jonas had told them how the meat that was taken out of pickle would often be found sour, and how they would rub it up with

ASSESSMENT QUESTIONS

2. Summarize the various ways the factory would use or cover up spoiled meat. Cite evidence in your answer.

You received a 4 out of 4.

As the factory was so blinded by money, the consumers were receiving spoiled meat rather than quality meat. The factory deceived the public through the use of chemicals like "borax and glycerin" to conceal the moldiness and whiteness of the meat. Those meat would then "dumped into the hoppers, and made over again for home consumption." Similarly, spoiled harms were filled with "stronger pickle which destroyed the odor." In addition, after those harms had been smoked, some of them will turn bad; therefore, the workers would "extract bone, about which the bad part generally lay, and insert in the hole a white-hot iron." Furthermore, these spoiled meat usually chopped up to mix with other meat to make sausage. These examples revealed the squalid reality of different ways that the factory would use or cover up spoiled meat.
